THE PUBLIC PAINTING WORKSHOP AT THE CLUFFFALO INSTITUTE

CHARLES CLOUGH

ABOUT THE PAINTING WORKSHOP

I established the Cluffalo Institute in 2012 as a way to facilitate Cluffalo projects and manage my archive. Through the Institute I created the Cluffalo Painting Workshop at the Roycroft Campus on September 21st, 2015. Through public participation, a single painting is produced for each season of the year. At the time of this publication, twenty Seasons paintings have been completed by more than 750 participants in more than 250 sessions.

The process takes place in my studio at the Print Shop where I provide tools and materials, as well as my time and encouragement for free expression as is limited by gravity, viscosity and drying time, for the public to engage in the experience. Participants are offered an 8 x 10 inch board to create their own painting as a souvenir of the event.

The painting thus created represents a very particular response to the question: "what is painting today?" in the context of multiple "authors." At the end of the season I work the surface of the painting by gouging and grinding through the layers of paint which gives the artwork its characteristic look. The final single painting becomes the Cluffalo Season.

All are invited to participate in this cultural experiment, either as an individually or with others. Appointments can be made by contacting me through the information on the previous page.

THE FOLLOWING PAGES

This publication is a documentation of the progress of the painting produced in the Winter of 2021. It begins with the state of the artwork at the end of each session, followed by a portrait of the participant opposite their souvenir of the experience.
